West Region Leads in Sales and Profit

The West region is the most significant contributor to overall business performance, accounting for 31.58% of total sales and an even larger 37.86% of total profit. This indicates not only high demand in the region but also a better profit margin—likely due to efficient logistics, lower costs, or stronger customer loyalty. This region could be targeted for further investment, expansion, or new product testing, as it offers the best return per dollar earned.

Technology Drives Profit

The Technology category dominates in profitability, contributing around $150K, followed by Office Supplies at approximately $120K. In contrast, Furniture lags significantly with only about $20K in profit. Despite possibly similar sales volumes, the profit variance suggests much higher margins in Technology or lower operating costs. This insight can guide product strategy—focusing more on high-margin categories while optimizing or re-evaluating the pricing or sourcing of lower-profit ones like Furniture.

Sales & Category Trends Over Time

The line chart highlights temporal trends in sales, showing that Office Supplies and Technology experienced notable spikes, particularly around 2016. These seasonal or cyclical increases may correlate with corporate procurement cycles, year-end budgets, or back-to-school seasons. Understanding these patterns allows businesses to anticipate demand, run timely promotions, and ensure inventory readiness during peak periods.

Sales Distribution Is Broad but Uneven

The map visualization reveals a widespread geographic footprint, with sales and product sub-categories reaching nearly all U.S. states. However, sales density is much higher in key economic hubs such as California, Texas, and New York. These regions likely contain more commercial customers, better infrastructure, and higher purchasing power. As such, they can be prioritized for localized marketing, customer retention efforts, and distribution optimization.
